Matilda Peterson on Vocational Education

Kirkville Mo., July 24.
I take pleasure in writing a few lines on vocational education as I have observed it in some of the rural schools of Missouri.

So important is the work of preparing rural teachers that a model school, designed by Dr. John R. Kirk of the state normal, is conducted in connection with this great institution of learning.

This model school is an important factor in the preparation of teachers who spend much of their time in the country schools.

While it is only a one room building planned to accommodate thirty students, including eight grades, it exemplifies the simplest and, yet the most complete, practical and economical architecture known anywhere for country schools.

It is entirely separate from the normal building, but is built on the same campus, on the southeast corner of the square.

The children are transported from their homes in a covered wagon, coming from three to four miles. After arriving, they are greeted by a teacher of the Columbia University of New York, who has charge of the Model school.

It would be impossible in a limited space, to describe the opportunities afforded the students who are in attendance.

The building is apparently faultless. Light in abundance, adjustable seats on movable platforms, telephone on teacher's desk, bookcases, organ, stereopticon and screen to illustrate lessons in geography, history, etc., toilet rooms, drinking fountains and many other practical things too numerous to mention, are in evidence.

In the attic, which is lighted by gable and roof light, may be seen manual training and domestic science equipment, for the use of the boys and girls in the upper grades.

The basement is divided into eight compartments, including furnace room, coal bin, bulb or plant room, dark room for children's experiments in photography, laundry room, play room, tank room and engine room.

School gardening is one of the interesting features. Here the boys and girls are taught to do by doing, and they are led to see that while the earth furnishes the materials which man needs, work leads to the supplying of his necessities.

Another most interesting school visited that of the Porter school, a few miles north of Kirkville. It is in charge of Mrs. Harvey, formerly of this city. She seems to have leaned close to the heart of nature, for everything about her surroundings suggests work in agriculture, school gardening and dignity of labor. The boys and girls are being educated to stay on the farm, to help one another and make the community better. They are being taught by example and precept.

Only two years ago this school was considered the poorest in the county. It was a rendezvous for tramps at night, and the building was infected with the filth of their minds by obscene language written on the walls. The roof leaked, the plaster in many places had fallen to the floor, an old ramshackle stove stood in one corner of the room and altogether the room presented a most dreary aspect. What a transition took place as soon as Mrs. Harvey came to the school! First there was an awakening in community life because of the enthusiasm and earnestness of the teacher.

Scrubbing, sterilizing, mending, painting, general repairing and a thorough renovation were soon in progress. A Farmers' club was organized, and through this organization, the building was lifted, the basement dug and concreted, and a furnace put in by the citizens, all working together for the betterment of school conditions; the teacher enthusing them with an impetus for higher ideals in educational purposes.

She, herself, gave the school a drinking fountain and water system. In place of the unsanitary bucket and dipper so much in evidence in the country schools. Prior to her coming, the school had not had a community meeting for ten years. Now it has become a center of social activities. Once a week the Farmers' club meets in the school basement, while the Farm Women's club, sisters and daughters meet in the school room. Discussions on parliamentary law, neighborhood welfare, farm conditions current events and other topics of interest take place at these meetings. The good old fashioned picnics are not forgotten. "These women in the neighborhood know how to cook and keep house," said Mrs. Harvey, "and they will teach their daughters. I want to teach other things. I want them to be able to appreciate the beauty of a sunset and the possibilities of being happy in their homes, just as much as I want to teach arithmetic, geography and writing."

She said too: "The teacher of a country school should live in the community where she is employed. She must be one of the forces in the neighborhood. Her cottage must be one of community life."

The following are a few of her maxims and trumpet notes to success:

"Labor depends not on what you do, but how you do it."
"Success depends not upon luck but upon pluck."

"The country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out of doors and in touch with the earth and nature is the natural life of man."

"Opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as it comes to a boy in the city."

The time spent at the Porter school in Adair county, Mo., was most profitable, entertaining and interesting to the visitors. The work being done there is a big experiment in rural education and we shall no doubt hear more of Mrs. Harvey and her plans for the future. Respectfully yours,
Signed, MATILDA PETERSON

HOUSE COMMITTEE SUSTAINS PRESIDENT

Washington, July 28.—Republican Leader Mann's resolution calling for all the papers in President Wilson's commutation of sentence of Dr. Thomas J. Kemp of this city, a son-in-law of Senator Fletcher of Florida, was defeated today in the house judiciary committee. The committee took the view that executive clemency was exclusively an act of grace vested in the president and that there was no precedent for the resolution. Representative Mann gave notice that he expected to call up the resolution in the house.

Dr. Kemp was convicted in the courts here of using the mails for disseminating information for illegal purposes. He was sentenced to two years and a $5000 fine. The president commuted all but the fine.
